PERSONAL NOTE FROM OUR EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

MOST SIWES INTERNS ARE WASTING THEIR TIME. ARE YOU ONE OF THEM?

Are you really showing up or just marking attendance? When you get a project, are you taking it seriously, or are you just waiting for it to be done? Are you asking questions, collaborating, learning, or just watching the clock? Are you posting on LinkedIn to show your growth, or only when someone else notices?

Think about this: in three years, when you look back, will this internship be a career milestone — or just a line on a CV?

Are you using this chance to gain skills, build networks, and level up, or are you treating it like a task you "have to do" because school requires it?

Most people don't get this opportunity. Most people will never have a mentor, hands-on projects, or real exposure at your stage. This is yours. Are you going to maximize it, or are you going to let it slip by?

It's your move. Make it count.

Keep reading this issue — inside, you'll find insights, tips, and perspectives to help you turn every opportunity into real growth.

I'm proud to share that I've successfully defended my 6-month Industrial Training at HiiT Plc

This experience has been a transformative chapter in my journey as a Computer Engineering student at Federal University Oye-Ekiti where I immersed myself in the practical world of Networking and Cybersecurity.

Beyond the technical skills, it taught me the value of persistence, teamwork, and adaptability.

I've learned that excellence isn't just about mastering tools and systems, but about developing the mindset to approach challenges with curiosity, resilience, and a drive to create meaningful solutions.

I'm sincerely grateful to HiiT Plc for the mentorship, guidance, and opportunities to explore the real-world side of technology. My appreciation also goes to my colleagues, supervisors, and everyone who supported my learning journey along the way, your encouragement made a real difference.

As I look ahead, I'm inspired to keep building, learning, and contributing to the ever-evolving field of technology, and creating solutions that make a lasting impact.
